About the Restaurant

Qvevri is a large Georgian restaurant at 101 Akaki Beliashvili Street in Tbilisi's Dighomi district, on the street known for the city's big traditional restaurants. Its concept comes from Georgian wine culture and takes its name from the qvevri, the clay vessel in which Georgian wine has been made for thousands of years.

The interior is modern Georgian with traditional touches, with a main hall and stage, VIP areas and a large outdoor terrace. The kitchen serves modern and classic Georgian dishes, and shoti bread is baked in the restaurant's own tone oven, where groups can also join a short bread-making master class.

Every evening brings live music from 20:00, with Georgian folk dance performances, which makes Qvevri a lively choice for welcome and farewell dinners and for large group celebrations.
